Though mockery shakes the tinsel on its head
And points the way to darkness and to hell,
Cackling " Beware of visions " all our dead
Whisper " It was for visions that we fell ".

INTRODUCTION

The present volume is the first attempt of its kind to publish a list of inscriptions on Christian tombs and monuments in the Central Provinces and Berar. It owes its origin to an undertaking given by the husband of the writer when attending the Gwalior Session of the Indian Historical Records Commission in 1929, but pressure of official work throughout 1930 and 1931, and the fact that the information required for the biographical notes was only obtainable in England, necessitated the undertaking being discharged largely by proxy.

The Central Provinces were first constituted in 1862, and in compiling the lists the aim held in view has been to make as complete a record as possible of all Commissioned Officers, military or civil, their wives and families, who died in the Province prior to that date. The inscriptions are tabulated in full in the main list except those concerning the families of purely military officers, whose names and dates only will be found in the Appendix. After 1862 the Appendix has been omitted and particulars regarding the families of civil officers directly connected with the Province only have been given. Even with these restrictions the volume is a bulky one. The lists have all been collected by district officials and their wives and to them my thanks are due, and particularly to Mrs. Greenfield who undertook the listing of the big Saugor cemeteries and to Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Mitchell and Miss Butler for the equally heavy lists for Kamptee and Nagpur. In addition to the inscribed tombs, information has been added regarding a few scattered European graves whose identity has now been lost, in the hope that further research may, as in the case of Josiah Webbe, lead to their identification. The names also of officers whose deaths appear in the records of Dodwell and Miles, but whose graves cannot now be traced, have been included in their proper chronological order in the cemetery lists of the places in which they died. Such names are printed in italics. " The privy paw of the native dhoby " has robbed many of the older tombs of their inscriptions, and it is a fairly safe inference that where consecrated ground already existed these men were buried in it.

The biographical notes are uneven, but they are as complete as it was possible to make them with the materials and information then available, during a short period of leave in England in the summer of 1931. My thanks are due to Mr. W. Saunders and to Major Hassall for all the assistance they gave me at the India Office. It is, however, to the generosity of Major V. C. P. Hodson that I owe nearly all the notes on the Company Officers, and I have to thank him not only for putting at my disposal his card index transcriptions of the Cadet Papers of the Madras and Bombay Officers prior to 1832, but also for allowing me to make free use of the still unpublished pages of that mine of information, his " List of the officers of the Bengal Army, 1758—1832 ". Here and there the general notes, on the battles and sieges, may appear to be out of proportion to their importance, but the names of the men who took part in them are forgotten and their graves mostly lost. For one killed in action in those early wars, ten must have died of wounds, sickness, disease or fatigue, and for these there is now no monument but the record of the achievements they helped to make possible.

In point of historical interest the Christian monuments of the Central Provinces cannot vie with the older presidencies or with the more important Punjab and United Provinces; yet not infrequently its earlier graves reflect a history wider than its own. The earliest monument, that erected by Warren Hastings over the grave of Alexander Elliot (1778), is four years older than any Christian monument in the Punjab and an echo of the declaration of war between England and France in the preceding year. When the news of the outbreak of hostilities reached Calcutta in 1778, the Governor General, Warren Hastings, determined by the negotiation of an alliance to check French influence behind Tipu Sultan and Scindia, and to this end sent his Private Secretary Alexander Elliot, post haste to the court of Raghoji Bhonsla; but the boy minister died at Semra in Sarangarh State, and the mission failed. Ten years later the fear of another war caused Cornwallis to send the traveller George Forster to Nagpur, this time to negotiate a treaty against Tipu Sultan himself. Forster also was unsuccessful, but when the expected war broke out, he returned once more to Nagpur and died there in 1791. These were the single spies, in 1803 when the internal dissensions of the Mahrattas induced Baji Rao Peshwa to call in his English allies, the battalions came with Wellesley to Assaye. On the day following the battle, nearly 200 British dead were buried in a patch of scrub jungle outside the village, and there they sleep under the guardianship of Colonel Maxwell, of the 19th Dragoons, who as " Ussell Sahib " still extends his potent protection to the village itself so long as the bones of his men are left in peace. The British Army swept on to Argaum and Gawilgarh and at each place the British graves are the only memorials of the victories. Colonel Kenny, who led the storming column at Gawilgarh, died of wounds at Ellichpur and is buried in the Dispensary compound.

In 1805 Josiah Webbe died at Dolaria, near Hoshangabad, while on his way to join Daulat Rao Scindia, to whose court he had been appointed as Resident. Ten years later the adventurer Drew, who commanded Salabat Khan's Brigade, was killed in a border foray at Murmura and is buried at Ellichpur near the northern gate.

In 1817 war again broke out. The depredations of the Pindaris, carried on under the patronage of the Mahratta princes, had led to widespread anarchy in Central India and the Deccan, and Lord Hastings determined to suppress them. Hostilities broke out at Poona in October and on receipt of the news the Bhonsla threw off all pretence of friendship with the British Government, and attacked the troops at Sitabuldi, where a severe battle was fought under the walls of the Residency on November 26th-27th. The victory and the dead are commemorated by an obelisk in the Sitabuldi Fort. On the arrival of General Doveton with the 2nd Division there followed the battle and siege of Nagpur, when the heroic Bell died at the breach of the Juma Darwaza on December 24th. The graves of Bell and of the men who fell with him cannot now be traced, but it is known that they received a full military funeral and they almost certainly lie in the old cemetery under the Fort. In 1818 there were British divisional headquarters at Hoshangabad, Harda and at Saugor, from whence troops were despatched to carry the forts of Mandla, Chanda, Satanwari, Garhakota and Asirgarh; their dead in each case rest beneath the walls. Detachments scattered over the length and breadth of the country held passes and fords, or chased the flying Pindaris through the jungles, and here and there scattered graves still mark the line of march. By 1819 peace was re-established, but already a year before, women had followed their men to the new cantonment at Saugor. A pathetic inscription in the old cemetery commemorates one Louisa Manson, who died " only a few weeks after the death of her father who was mortally wounded at the storm of Satanwari 10th June 1818 ".

In 1822 the Surveyor-General, Colonel W. Lambton, died in camp at Hinganghat in his 70th year. Of him it was written that " Thanks to his genius and resolution, British India was only a few years behind England and France in beginning a great trigonometrical survey, a stupendous work which occupied the lives of several noble and devoted surveyors, and which when completed will be one of the most glorious monuments of British rule in the East ". In 1840 another grand old man, Major-General Sir Thomas Anbury, died at Saugor in his 80th year, after 57 years in the service of the Company. He had been on active service the year before his death. In the same cemetery the grave of Captain Ralfe, who was killed in action near Malthone in 1842, marks the Bundela rebellion, a rising brought about by the irritation of the zemindars at the strange workings of the new Civil Courts and by the tyranny of a local thanadar. In 1849 a rebellion raised by an impostor who claimed to be the Appa Sahib broke out in Berar, during which Brigadier Onslow with the Ellichpur Division defeated a body of Rohillas at Kallam on the Wardha River on April 30th, but was himself killed in the pursuit by a fall from his horse. His body was brought to Ellichpur for burial.

For the most part, the years between the close of the Third Mahratta War and the outbreak of the Mutiny were peaceful, and the work of progressive administration went quietly on. The extermination of Thuggee was then in progress. Government had known of the existence of the Thugs since 1816, but the tales told were for long thought too monstrous to be true. Then Sleeman (later Sir W. Sleeman, K.C.S.I.) became Deputy Commissioner of Narsinghpur and the notorious Feringhia was captured. Sleeman during his examination of the prisoner, learned for the first time the scope and far-reaching ramifications of the system, and verified his information by digging up the bodies of over 100 victims in the grove near Narsinghpur where his tents were then pitched. He succeeded in awakening the interest of the Supreme Government, and in 1825 was himself appointed General Superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee with headquarters at Jubbulpore where he remained till 1836. After a distinguished career he died at sea in 1856 and his name and services are commemorated by tablets at Christ Church and at the Industrial School (old Thuggee jail), Jubbulpore, the first of which was placed there by his nephew, J. Sleeman, who succeeded him in the Thuggee Department.

The Mutiny touched the Province lightly. In Berar Meadows-Taylor obeyed the Resident's order to " hang on by his eyelids " and held the doubtful Mahommadans by his personal prestige. There was no revolt, and the murder of Major Hare in the mess at Ellichpur was the work of a sentry who had run amok. At Nagpur the courageous and determined action of the Deputy Commissioner, Major Plowden, prevented the intended rising of the cavalry, and the only casualties in the division were in Chanda, where two telegraphists, Gartland and Hall, were murdered in camp at Chunchgondi by insurgent Gonds. North of the Nerbudda the situation was more critical. The Bundelas revolted and overran the districts, Damoh was abandoned, and the Europeans of Jubbulpore and Saugor were forced to shelter behind walls. In Saugor the 3rd Cavalry and the 42nd Infantry mutinied on the 31st July, but no murders occurred, as the Europeans had two days previously been collected in the Fort, where three hundred and seventy men, women and children were shut up for seven months. In the old cemetery, beside a number of victims of disease from the Fort, lies the body of Colonel Dalyell of the 42nd, who was killed in an attack on the rebel camp at Nariaoli on September 18th. Captain G. Neville, a brilliant Engineer, who accompanied the Central India Field Force, is buried at Rahatgarh near Barodia where he was killed in action on January 31st ; and Ensign Wadham Spens, killed at Balabat, lies in the compound of the dâk bungalow at Malthone. In Jubbulpore the 52nd B. I. did not mutiny until September 18th, when the issue was forced by the execution of the Gond Raja Shankar Shah. At the time of the outbreak two companies of the 52nd were encamped at Sleemanabad and Patan, where they had been sent in order to diminish the number of potential mutineers at Jubbulpore itself ; the remainder finding themselves unsupported by the local zemindars marched away towards Saugor without waiting to attack the frail defences of the Residency. At Patan, the mutineers seized Macgregor who commanded the company in that village, and subsequently murdered him near Katangi. His body lies in the old cemetery at Jubbulpore, and beside it are the graves of Major Jenkins, D.A.Q.M.G., of the Nagpur Moveable Column, and Captain Tottenham who were both killed during punitive expeditions in the district.

With the Mutiny military activities in the Province ceased and only occasional famines troubled its peace. The first of which there is any record is the Bundelkhand Famine of 1868-69. The relief measures then undertaken were, it may be inferred, inadequate, and the loss of life so considerable as to cause Government, at its close, to lay down the principle that District officers would be held directly responsible for any unnecessary loss of life in their districts. Fortunately the next twenty-five years were all prosperous, but the monuments at Nagpur and Jubbulpore, to the officers who lost their lives in the great Famine of 1896-97 show how, when the test came, they discharged their duty. In that terrible year Jubbulpore alone lost on famine duty its Commissioner, two successive Deputy Commissioners and an Assistant District Superintendent of Police. Their lives were not given in vain. It is largely due to the experience then gained that relief measures were so organized and improved that when, in 1919-20 equally severe famine conditions prevailed, no single death from starvation was reported.

Among the inscriptions few will be found with any claim to originality and the most noteworthy epitaph, although it does not appear on a tomb, is Warren Hastings' paraphrase of Horace Ad Grosphum, which he dedicated to Sir J. Shore and wrote during his last voyage home, on his young friend Alexander Elliot who had died far off in the jungles of Chhattisgarh :—

..........I bade the stone
Record his name 'midst hordes unknown
Unknowing what it told and this suggests one last subject. The Central Provinces are a land of jungles and in the districts the animals of the jungle, the tiger, panther, bison and even the bee, have all taken their toll, and there are few cemeteries where the words " died of injuries received from a tiger " do not appear. Where this has happened, the fact has not always been recorded, the old tales are soon forgotten and it is certain that the number of those killed by wild animals is considerably larger than would appear from the lists. For the rest the graveyards of the Province resemble those elsewhere. Here are the graves of boys fresh from home, of young brides and mothers, and here too is the same terrible waste of child life—the most striking feature of every Indian graveyard.

Battle of Sitabuldi and battle and siege of Nagpur, 26th November to 29th December 1817.

Battle of Sitabuldi, 26th November 1817.

After Lord Wellesley's return to England the Directors of the Company reversed his policy and by weakness and hesitation laid the train for another war with the Mahrattas. The new conflict was precipitated by the Pindaris. This system of military bandits, recruited from the disbanded armies of regular governments, had become an ever-increasing menace to hope of peace and settled government in Central India and the Deccan. In 1817 the Governor General, Lord Hastings, determined to suppress them finally. As it was well known that the Pindaris were harboured and encouraged by the Mahratta princes, a force was assembled which was large enough to deal with the whole Confederacy, should it unite with the freebooters, though all possible measures were taken to prevent this alliance.

Until the commencement of November the attitude of the Bhonsla, Appa Sahib, was friendly to the British, but it became evident that he was not to be trusted and was secretly negotiating with Cheetu, the Pindari leader. The Resident, Mr. Jenkins, accordingly called in Lt.-Col. Scott's detachment from Ramtek. On the 14th November news was received that hostilities had broken out in Poona, and the Bhonsla accepted in open darbar a khilat from the Peshwa's messenger and then proceeded in state to Sonegaon, his principal camp on the west of the town. Jenkins, perceiving that hostilities were inevitable, despatched a messenger to General Doveton asking for assistance. A part of the Residency Guard was at the same time sent to occupy the double hill of Sitabuldi which stands between the Residency and the City and consists of two low eminences connected by a ridge. Owing to the rocky nature of the ground the position could not be entrenched, but was protected by a breastwork of grainbags. The suburbs of the city approached close to the foot of the smaller hill which was held by the Madras Infantry. The remainder of the Infantry and the guns were posted on the larger hill and the cavalry protected the rear of the Residency. In front and on both flanks of the British position, extended a village in which the enemy assembled with their guns.

In the evening of the 26th November, one of the British piquets was fired on, and forced to retire to the smaller hill under a heavy fire from Arab matchlockmen. This was kept up till past midnight and the attack was reopened by guns and musketry at dawn. Heavy losses were sustained on the smaller hill which the Arabs made frequent attempts to carry. At length, in the confusion caused by the explosion of a tumbril, they charged, drove off the defenders and turned the gun posted there on to the larger hill, where the casualties soon became severe. The enemy horse and foot then closed in to prepare for a general assault.

Captain Fitzgerald with three troops of the 6th Bengal Cavalry was posted in the Residency gardens. For some time he had asked in vain for permission to charge; seeing that the total destruction of the garrison was imminent he appealed once more. He was again peremptorily refused and told to charge at his own peril. "Then at my peril be it," he said and gave the order. The small force galloped at the principal body of the enemy horse, drove them from the two guns by which they were supported, pursued them for some distance, cut up a body of infantry and returned with the captured guns. This exploit, witnessed by the hard driven infantry, encouraged them to fresh efforts and when shortly after an explosion of ammunition took place among the Arabs on the smaller hill, officers and men rushed forward, ousted the enemy, spiked two of their guns and then returned to their posts. The British now assumed the offensive and by noon the battle was ended.

The British force lost in this action 119 killed, including 5 officers and a sergeant major; and 43 wounded, including 13 officers, out of a total of 1,500 men. The loss of the enemy was about the same out of 18,000 troops present, but only 3,000 Arabs and a body of cavalry actually took part in the attack.

			had come to this country as an Agent from Calcutta. He died a natural death at the age of 39. His death occurred on the 28th Rabi-us sani 1204 Hijri. This tomb was erected by the Officer Commanding the Resident's Bodyguard, Lt. James Davidson."
			This monument and the remains of George Forster were removed on the 6th March 1915, from the banks of the Nag River at Bagadganj to this graveyard owing to the danger of further erosion of the bank, allowing the monument and remains to be washed into the river, A. D. 1915.
			George Forster (sometimes spelt Foster. Writer's petition missing at the I. O.) Madras C. S. Born 1752. Arrived as Writer 1770. Under Secretary 1771. Under the Expert Warehouse-keeper 1772. Under the Land Customs 1773. Factor and under the Land Customs 1775. In 1782-84 he was the first Englishman to make the overland journey from India to England. The adventure is recorded in a two-volume work entitled " A journey from Bengal to England through the Northern part of India to England, Kashmir, Afghanistan and Persia into Russia, by George Forster in the Civil Service of the East India Company ". He left Benares 12th December 1782, disguised as a Georgian and subsequently as a Turk going to Kashmir for merchandise. He reached Srinagar 7th May 1783, where the Afghan ruler proposed to impress him for military service, but Forster was able to bribe his way out. He changed his disguise to that of a pilgrim to Mecca, and reached England by way of Moscow in July 1784. In 1787 Forster was deputed by the Governor-General, Lord Cornwallis, to conclude a defensive alliance with Mudhoji Bhonsla and the Nizam against Tipu Sultan. He reached Nagpur 15th July 1788, but reported that the wealth and strength of the Bhonsla had been overestimated and that the alliance would be almost worthless. He was recalled in February 1789. In December 1789 the war between the English and Tipu Sultan broke out and it was again thought desirable to bring the Bhonsla into alliance with the Nizam and the Poona Darbar. Forster was once more despatched to Nagpur, which he reached in June 1790, but his negotiations were unsuccessful. He stayed on in the hopes of inducing the new Raja Raghoji to treat, but fell ill and died at Nagpur on 5th January 1791. When his remains were moved in 1915 the skeleton was found intact. Reference Wills.

Colonel Lambton First Superintendent of the Great Trigonometrical Survey. Died in camp at Hinganghat on the 20th of January 1823, aged 70. This tablet has been renewed by the Officers of the Survey of India Department. William Lambton the "Father of Indian Survey" was born at Crosby Grange, North Allerton, in 1753. Parentage unknown but appears to have been of humble origin. Educated Grammar School, North Allerton, and by Dr. Hutton at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Appointed Ensign in Lord Fauconberg's Foot. Transferred to 33rd Foot. Appointed to Land Settlement in Nova Scotia 1784. In 1795 the Duke of York ordered all officers in Civil employ to be struck off the strength; so in 1797 Lambton returned to his regiment then stationed in Calcutta under the command of Sir Arthur Wellesley. Served as Brigade-Major in Mysore Campaign; led the left column in the storm of Seringapatam after all the senior officers had been disabled. Employed in the exploration and mapping of Mysore after the fall of Tipu Sultan. Submitted a report to Government for the measurement of an arc of meridian; owing to the support of Lord Clive and Sir Arthur Wellesley the scheme was approved, and the Mathematical and Geographical Survey of Madras was set on foot in 1799. Lambton was appointed to conduct the measurements and set about collecting instruments. His 3-foot Cary theodolite was captured on the way to India by the French Frigate "Piedmontaise", but De Caen, the Governor of Mauritius, returned it to Lord Clive. The zenith sector and chain with which he measured the first base line, had been sent to China with Macartney's Embassy but the Emperor not understanding their use, they were returned to Madras where Lambton secured them. The first base line was measured in 1800 and a network of triangles carried across the peninsula, by which an error of 40 miles was discovered in the old maps in a breadth of 360 miles. For 17 years the work was carried on in the face of the opposition of the Finance Department. In 1817 France elected Lambton as Corresponding Member of the Institute of France. In 1818 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society. On 1st January 1818 Lord Hastings, who realized the importance of the trigonometrical survey, transferred Lambton's Department to the control of the Supreme Government when it took the name of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India. In the cold weather of 1822 Lambton had perfected his work as far as Berar, but the exposure and the hardship of 22 seasons of field work had proved too much. On the return of his assistant Captain Everest from sick leave to the Cape, he set out from Haiderabad to Nagpur to make arrangements for continuing the Great Arc operations, but died on the road at Hinganghat, having completed the survey of 165,342 square miles. *Reference Markham and D. The Siege of Chanda, 9th—20th May 1818

After the dispersal of Baji Rao's army, Colonel Adams was directed to march on Chanda, where he arrived on the 9th May 1818. The town of Chanda is situated on a tongue of land between two small rivers; the eastern side is protected by a large tank, and the jungle comes right up to the walls 6 miles in circumference and from 15 to 20 feet high. The garrison consisted of 2,000 men. On the evening of the 13th the first battery was erected on the south side of the town and the shelling commenced. By the 19th a practicable breach was made and the assault ordered for the following morning. The storming party of two columns, the right composed of Bengal, the left of Madras troops, were supported by two battalions of infantry. At dawn, the storming party, led by Col. Scott, mounted the breach and was met by a discharge of musketry; but rushing on, the right and left columns cleared the south, east and north walls, while Col. Scott led the advance of the supporting battalions down the central street. On the walls the right column only met with a strong opposition, but succeeded in driving back the enemy, who thereupon made no further attempt to rally, but fled through the Jerpur gate. Many let themselves down over the wall as the remaining gateways had been bricked up. The Killedar Gunga Singh and 200 of his men were killed and a hundred were taken prisoners. The British casualties amounted to 14 killed and 56 wounded.

Among the killed were—

Assistant Surgeon Anderson.

3 Privates of the Bengal Foot Artillery.

Died of heat and exhaustion—

Major G. I. Goreham, Commanding Artillery.

Lieut. W. Hadfield.

Assistant Surgeon Hastie.

NEAR CHANDA CITY

The Archaeological Survey, Eastern Circle, for 1907-08, published an article in Bengal: Past and Present volume III, relating to a search that had been made around Chanda for the tombs of officers who had fallen during the siege and subsequent occupation of the town. Seven tombs were then found of which three only were known to the inhabitants, the remaining four being concealed in thick scrub jungle. Of these tombs only those of Goreham and Hadfield were inscribed. It would appear that the present inscriptions "to an officer, etc." recorded below, were put up as a result of this search. The four jungle tombs have again been lost and no inscribed monuments of 1818 are now known to exist at Chanda.

Siege of Mandla, 14—26th April 1818

After the occupation of Saugor and the surrounding country, General Marshall marched on Mandla to punish the treachery of the Killedar towards the officer sent to take over the fort. The advance guard under Brigadier Watson, reached the town on April 14th ; the ordnance, owing to the difficulties of the road, four days later. Mandla Fort was found to be garrisoned by 2,000 men. It occupied a strong position on a point formed by the junction of the Banjar with the Nerbudda and a deep ditch on the northern side made the place virtually an island. The town was also protected by the rivers and a smaller connecting ditch.

Batteries were erected and the place closely invested. Before shelling began, the Killedar was prevailed upon to send the women and children out of the fort under promise of a safeguard to their homes.

By the afternoon of the 26th a breach in the town wall was found to be practicable. Orders were given for the assault, which was led by General Watson. The storming party entered the breach, some holding the ramparts, while the rest entered the town. The garrison fled towards the fort, but the gates were shut and the majority were destroyed. A party of 250 tried to escape by a sally-port but were cut up by the cavalry. It was now dark. The storming party was ordered to remain in occupation of the town, and during the night one of their pickets detected and seized the Killedar as he attempted to escape by boat. Next morning the fort was surrendered. The enemy's loss was estimated at 500, that of the British Force, 3 killed and 14 wounded ; of the latter, 2 were Europeans.

John Shipp, in his account of the siege of Mandla refers to a Captain B. who acted in an insubordinate and possibly corrupt manner by holding an unauthorized conversation with the Killedar and subsequently entering the fort with his men on the night that the town was stormed. His conduct was deemed most suspicious and a court martial was ordered. Before the court-martial sat he became ill, died, and was buried on the spot. As he had hitherto held an unblemished record and did not live to record his own evidence in the matter, Shipp withheld his name. This account probably refers to Captain A. Black who is known to have been present at the siege and to have died shortly afterwards.

MANDLA CHURCH

In 1899 the bones of three British soldiers belonging to General Marshall's force were found by the Rev. E. P. Herbert and reburied in Mandla Church near the porch. An old register of graves confirms their identity as members of General Marshall's force but gives no names. It is probable that one of them is Captain A. Black and another that of a private of Pioneers returned in the casualty list after the storming of Mandla as dangerously wounded.

LALIPUR

There are two graves in Lalipur, a suburb of Mandla, which local tradition assigns to British officers or soldiers of the time of the Mutiny. An inscribed stone existed on one of these until September 1926 when it was washed away in the Great Flood.

In 1857 a small detachment of troops was sent to Mandla to subdue the widow of the Gond Raja Shanka Shah who was convicted of conspiracy to massacre the European population of Jubbulpore and was blown from a gun on the 18th September. She seized Ramgarh and caused some trouble in the district but was finally defeated and committed suicide.

428	20th May 1819.	W. Paterson ..	Here lie the remains of Lt. William Paterson 30th Native Infantry and District Barrack Master on the Nerbudda. Distinguished by a high sense of honour and integrity which he evinced no less by the zealous discharge of his professional duties than by his conduct in all the private relations of life. Of a disposition manly, sincere and generous, he enjoyed in a peculiar degree the esteem and respect of all who knew him. He died on 20th May 1819, in the 28th year of his age.
9	27th May 1819.	C. Paterson ..	Also to the remains of Charlotte Frances Nisbet his wife. Daughter of William Smoult of Calcutta. She united energy of mind rarely equalled, and combined with the graces of Christian character all the kindly charities of the heart, unaffected piety, meekness and humility marked the undeviating tenour of her life. The generous affectionate fervour exhibited in her conduct as a Daughter, Wife, Mother, Sister, Friend, lives deeply engraved in the Memory off those who survive to deplore her loss. The tender anxiety of each for the other, under a malady that visited both at nearly the same time, aided the progress of the disease and sped the shaft which had struck the Husband to the Heart of the Wife. Having vainly struggled to support life for the sake of their only child, her spirit fled to enjoy an eternal union with his, after a separation of only seven days. She expired on the 27th of the same month, aged 29 years. W. Paterson, b. Braehead, Kilmarnock 24th May 1791. Cadet 1807. Arrived in India 19th August 1808. Ensign 28th August 1808. The Bundela Rebellion

The Bundela Rebellion broke out in March 1842. It originated in the Saugor district and was the result of discontent caused by the new civil courts among a traditionally lawless people, and by the personal enmity between a Thanadar and some of the leading malguzars. Three of these went into open rebellion when served with decrees from the Civil Court in Saugor, killed several of the police and burned and plundered the towns of Khimlasa, Khurai, Nariaoli, Dhamoni and Binaika. They were joined by many notable dacoits from Scindia's territory and their example was followed by Delan Shah, a Gond Chief of Narsinghpur, and the whole of the trans-Nerbudda portion of that district rose in rebellion. A military force was called out and there were a number of minor raids and skirmishes with the insurgents. The disturbances lasted for about a year and the affected area suffered severely from the rising. Delan Shah was subsequently hanged for his activities in 1857.

SAUGOR FORT, 1857

Saugor Brigade under Brigadier Sage.
1 Coy. European Artillery.
3rd Irregular Cavalry.
31st B. N. I.
42nd B. N. I.

The excitement caused by the news of the outbreaks in Meerut and Delhi, and of the massacre at Jhansi made it clear that the troops stationed at Saugor were not to be trusted. On June 25th a detachment, sent to the relief of the Europeans at Lalitpur, mutinied on reaching Malthone. This news reached Saugor on the 27th, when the Brigadier immediately resolved to occupy the Fort. This was an old Bundela stronghold which, since 1818, had been used by the British Government as an arsenal. It was built on a rock commanding the town by which it was surrounded on three sides, while the fourth bordered the lake. The walls were high, but old and far from strong, inside the accomodation was purely native except for the magazine, gunsheds and storehouses which were well-stocked with grain and contained a large supply of powder and ammunition. On the decision being made to occupy the Fort, the fortifications were hurriedly strengthened, and guns and mortars mounted on the walls. Cattle and sheep were collected and housed in sheds outside the Fort but commanded by it.

On June 29th the Europeans were all assembled in the Fort and the company of Artillery marched in bringing the treasure with them. On the 31st the whole of the 3rd Irregular Cavalry, with the exception of a few native officers and 50 sowars, mutinied, while Subadar Sheikh Ramzan of the 42nd raised the Mahomedan flag and was joined by the entire 42nd, by a few of the 31st and by the mutineers of the 3rd Cavalry. The mutineers at once commenced plundering and burning the officers' bungalows. The bulk of the 31st refused to join the mutineers and endeavoured to protect their officers' property. A few days later they asked for permission to attack the mutinous regiments. This was granted, but unfortunately Brigadier Sage refused to allow the white officers to accompany their men and they were only supported by a body of Customs chuprassis under the Deputy Commissioner Major Western. The action that followed was indecisive, but the mutineers left Saugor the next morning in something approaching a panic and went northwards.

Although throughout the 7 months that followed the Fort was never completely closed, the Bundelas overran the district and the garrison were forced to remain on the defensive; occasionally sending out detachments on brief expeditions to Damoh, Rehli, or Nariaoli. Within the Fort the Europeans, 370 in number, had only the barest necessities and suffered from over-crowding and unsuitable accommodation. The married officers and their wives lived in the long, low verandahs of a building known as the Lal Pettarah, which proved very unhealthy and the children suffered severely. The European Artillerymen and their families were housed in the gunsheds, until cholera broke out, when huts were erected on top of the sheds. Cholera, smallpox, diarrhoea and fever visited the congested Fort in turn and beside the European casualties the death roll among the native servants was very heavy. On January 29th Sir Hugh Rose opened his Central India Campaign by the reduction of Rahatgarh. On the 31st he fought an action at Barodia that opened the road to Saugor which he entered on February 5th when the whole population, native as well as British came out to welcome him in.

SATANWARI, 10th JUNE 1818

On the break up of the Grand Army a force was formed in the Saugor Territory under Brigadier General Watson, for though the great Mahratta Chiefs had submitted, many of the forts belonging to them still held out.

On May 31st Brigadier Watson marched against Satanwari, where he arrived on June 8th and was joined by a detachment from Colonel Adam's Division. The breaching batteries opened fire on the morning of the 10th, and by 5 p. m. the breach was pronounced practicable and an immediate assault ordered. The head of the storming party, proceeded with Pioneers with ladders, approached under their own gunfire to within 30 yards of the breach, when a sudden fire was opened on them by the defenders. The rear of the column sought shelter behind the neighbouring houses and refused to advance further. Lieutenant Manson was killed in the breach, where only four or five sepoys had followed their European officers. At nightfall the party retired, having lost 86, killed and wounded.

The garrison evacuated the fort during the night, and this eventuality having been foreseen and troops posted to intercept them, more than half were killed or made prisoners. The British loss in killed were—

Lieut. J. Manson.
1 Corporal of Artillery.

Both were buried on the spot but no trace of their graves remains.

509	10th June 1818.	J. Manson ..	John Manson, Lieut. 15th N. I., b. Lambeth 23rd August 1786. Cadet 1807. Arrived in India 14th August 1808. Ensign 26th September 1808. Struck off 12th May 1809. Cadet 1810. Ensign 1812. Lieut. 2nd January 1815. Baptised Bermondsey 21st September 1786. Son of Alexander Manson, shipbuilder and Jane his wife. Services—Barasat C. C. 1808-09. Struck off the Army List by order of the Court of Directors, having obtained his appointment by improper means. Reappointed Cadet March 1810. Cadet d. d. 25th N. I. 1811. Posted as Ensign to 2/15th N. I. 1812. Nepal War 1814-15; Lieut. 2/15th in 4th Division. Served with Pioneers 1815 till death. Third Mahratta War. His daughter is buried in Saugor and his brother Robert, in Narsinghpur. See pages 63 and 87.

GARHAKOTA, OCTOBER 1818

Garha-Kota was besieged by Brigadier General Watson on October 18th and the town taken without opposition. Breaching batteries were at once erected and opened fire on the Fort. The breach was ready for assault on the 29th but the garrison, unwilling to face a storm surrendered a few hours before it was due to be made. With the exception of two wounded sepoys the only casualties which occurred in the siege were those caused by the premature explosion of a shell in the mortar battery; this exploded 100 others and killed 4 European Artillerymen and 12 sepoys. The graves of the former cannot be traced.

DAK BUNGALOW COMPOUND, MALTHONE

510	23rd June 1857.	H. G. W. Spens ..	Sacred to the memory of Ensign Henry George Wadham Spens, the 31st Regiment Bengal Light Infantry who was killed on the capture of the neighbouring Fort of Balabat on the 23rd day of June 1857. H. G. W. Spens, b. in India 1st October 1833. Arrived in India 29th September 1852. Ensign 12th June 1852. Son of Major-General Andrew Spens Bengal Army and Diana Francis, daughter of Henry Wadham Diggle B.C.S. He was killed by the premature explosion of a mine that had been placed to blow up the gateway of the captured Fort of Balabat about 10 miles from Malthone.

The first outbreak of mutiny in the Saugor and Nerbudda Territories occurred at Malthone on this occasion. On June 13th a detachment of the 31st and 42nd B. N. I. under Major Gaussen, was sent from Saugor to the relief of the Europeans at Lalitpur. On reaching Malthone Major Gaussen found that the northern passes were in possession of Bundela insurgents, who had also driven in the Police Post at Balabat and now occupied the Fort. This he attacked successfully on June 23rd, taking 16 prisoners who were handed over to the police for custody. Major Gaussen then blew up the gateway of the fort and returned to his camp at Malthone. On arrival in the camp, the sepoys broke rank and surrounding Major Gaussen in a threatening manner, demanded the release of the prisoners. He was forced to comply, but the officers were not molested further and later were allowed to return to Saugor.

			RAHATGARH
511	31st Jan. 1858.	G. Neville	Killed in action January 31st 1858, aged 28 years. At Barodia, Glastonbury Neville, Captain, Royal Engineers. Text. G. Neville had only joined Sir Hugh Rose's force on the previous day. He had served with distinction in the Crimea before Sevastopol and the General, knowing his past record as an Engineer officer had had him brought up by forced marches to assist in the reduction of the many forts of this part of the country. During the action he exhibited that courage and intelligence which gained him his reputation. He was killed beside the General to whom he was acting as A. D. C. during the last stand of the rebels before Barodia village. An uninscribed grave beside Captain Neville's probably belongs to a British soldier who was killed in the same engagement.

Sir Hugh Rose advanced to the relief of Saugor by way of Rahatgarh, which, in spite of its numerous garrison, its strong position, and the attempt of the Raja of Banpur to draw off the investing force, fell on January 29th, after a three day bombardment. The bulk of the garrison escaped on the night preceding the assault, the remainder made a weak resistence and most of the rebel chiefs were made prisoners. On the 31st Sir Hugh Rose marched from Rahatgarh and came up with a strong body of rebels at Barodia on the Bina River. These fought with desperate courage but towards evening broke and fled precipitately, leaving behind them four or five hundred dead including their ablest leader Mahomed Fazal Khan. The British casualties were 2 killed and 21 wounded. This action opened the road to Saugor and finally destroyed rebel resistence in the district.

			Here lies Josiah Webbe 1767-1804. For many years Chief Secretary Madras Government. Nominated Resident with the Bhonsle Raja, Nagpur. Died at this place as Resident with the Maharaja Scindia. A Friend of Wellesley, Wellington, Munro and Malcolm. This monument was erected by Sir Barry Close, sometime Resident with the Peshwa, Poona. Restored 1932. Ecclesiasticus XLIV.
			Josiah Webbe, Madras C. S. b. at Nevis in 1767. Appointed Writer at Fort St. George 1783. Secretary to the Board of Revenue 1790. Secretary to the Government 1797. As first Chief Secretary, or Grand Secretary, he was responsible for the introduction at the instance of the Marquess of Wellesley of very important Revenue and Judicial Reforms, and also for the first Settlement of the Carnatic. He wrote an able minute deprecating the resumption of hostilities with Tipu Sultan which so displeased the Directors of the Company that Chamier was sent out from England to supersede him. He was nominated Resident at Mysore in 1802 and to the Court of the Bhonsla shortly after, he took up neither post but was retained at headquarters by the Madras Government who felt themselves unable to dispense with his services. Towards the middle of 1804 he was appointed Resident to the Court of Daulat Rao Scindia whom he joined in camp, but died on the 19th November at Dolaria near the banks of the Nerbudda while on the journey to Gwalior. Webbe was a remarkable linguist and one the ablest of Madras Civilians. Sir Arthur Wellesley was one of his closest friends. An imposing monument was erected to his memory in St. Mary's Church Fort St. George.

Served as Assistant Commissioner in Damoh and as Deputy Commissioner in Raipur and Nimar. In 1878 the bund of the Temple tank at Khandwa was in process of construction. Some of the stones used for this work came from the ruins of a mosque at Mundi where the inhabitants raised no objection to the removal. On October 7th one Faiz Muhamed of Khandwa raised an objection and complained of the action of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner Rai Bagchand in causing the removal of the stones. The Deputy Commissioner, Capt. Pemberton, refused to consider the complaint. On October 8th a service was held for the consecration of the new burial ground. After attending this service the Deputy Commissioner met Rai Bagchand and the Executive Engineer on the bund. Faiz Muhamed, who was hiding near by, came up unperceived and endeavoured to shoot Rai Bagchand. The pistol missed fire and Pemberton sprang at the assailant who drawing a second pistol shot him dead. In the pursuit that followed a railway porter who attempted to disarm the murderer was also killed, but the latter was finally seized, tried and hanged. Capt. Pemberton was thus buried in the ground consecrated that very morning; and the Governor-General Lord Cranbrook granted his widow a special pension of £ 70 per annum in addition to that to which she was entitled under the rules. Capt. Pemberton's son, John, is buried at Raipur. See page 105.

(With the exception of Colonel Fraser's tomb at the British Camp at Nimbola, these graves cannot be traced but the men were probably burried near him.)

By March 1819 the third Mahratta and Pindari War was virtually over and large forces were assembled for the reduction of Asirgarh, in which stronghold the Appa Sahib was reported to have taken refuge. The fortress of Asirgarh stands on the western extremity of the Satpuras. The Upper Fort crowns a detached hill, 750 feet in height, the wall is scarped and precipitous and only accessible in two places, both of which are strongly fortified. It is approached by a steep flight of steps and by five gateways from the Lower Fort, which itself stands on a spur of the same hill and dominates the partially walled town below. The concentration of General Doveton's forces was not completed until the middle of March, and the assault on the pettah was ordered for the 18th. The troops for the assault under Colonel Fraser of the Royal Scots were 5 companies of the Royal Scots, the flank companies of the 30th and 67th Foot and of the Madras Regiment, 5 companies of the 1st battalion 12th Madras Infantry, and details of Sappers and Miners. The reserve under Major Dalrymple were the remainder of the 30th Foot, 1 company of the Madras Europeans, 9 companies of Native Infantry, detachments of Native Cavalry and 4 Horse Artillery guns. At 1 a.m. the troops for the assault moved out of their camp at Nimbola, while Sir John Malcolm's force on the northern side of the fort commenced a feint attack to distract the attention of the garrison. The assaulting column advanced under cover of a ravine until within convenient distance of the town, when they rushed in by the gates and on both flanks, and at once overcame all resistence. On entering the town the troops found shelter in streets running parallel to the fort and so suffered few casualties. On the same day a battery of howitzers was erected in the town and commenced shelling the Lower Fort. On the 19th the enemy made a sally but were repulsed after reaching the main street, where Lt.-Col. Fraser was killed. Next day a heavy battery was completed and its fire made a breach in the wall, seeing which the enemy made another sortie but were again driven back. Before daybreak on the 21st the Mahrattas evacuated the Lower Fort in order to escape the storm, but very shortly afterwards a magazine exploded in the rear of the breaching battery killing a native officer and 34 men, and wounding 66 others, this so encouraged the enemy that they again reoccupied it. The shelling was immediately continued and on the 30th the Lower Fort was occupied by the British without further opposition. The breaching batteries were then transferred to the Lower Fort, in order to shell the Upper Fort. The attacking troops were much exposed to small arm fire from the walls above and suffered many casualties, but the siege was carried on briskly and the garrison becoming distressed asked for terms. On April 9th they surrendered unconditionally. It was then found that Scindia had given private orders to the Killedar to hold the fort at all costs and to ignore any public orders which he might receive later. On account of this duplicity Asirgarh was retained and garrisoned by the British after the rest of Nimar had been restored to Scindia at the conclusion of peace.

The total British loss during the siege amounted to 325 killed and wounded.

619	19th Mar. 1819.	T. Fraser	.. To the memory of Colonel Fraser 2nd Battn. the Royal Scots who commanded the column of attack on Asirgarh Fort March 1819, and was killed during a sortie of the enemy on the night of the 19th. This tablet was added to the obelisk which marks Col. Fraser's grave by the Officers of the old Battalion in 1907. Lt.-Col. Thomas Fraser of Burchgovit, Boleskine, near Inverness. Joined the service as Ensign in the 97th Foot 1794. Lieut. 1797, and was transferred to the Royal Scots in that year. Captain 1803. Major 1809. Bt. Lt.-Col. 4th June 1814. Brother of Simon Fraser of Montreal. Services—He served in Holland under Sir Ralph Abercrombe 1799; in Spain 1800; and in Egypt 1801, wounded at the landing as Alexandria, 7th March, present at the taking of Cairo, September 1801; medal. Served throughout the Third Mahratta War; present at the operations before Nagpur, December 16th—29th 1818. After the fall of the pettah at Asir, Lt.-Col. Fraser remained with the Royal Scots in occupation of the town. On the night of the 19th March the enemy made a surprise attack and reached the mosque in the main street where the officers were quartered, before their presence was known. On the alarm being given Lt.-Col. Fraser rushed out to rally his men who appear to have been engaged in plundering the neighbouring houses, and was shot through the head. His body was recovered and conveyed to the camp at Nimbola for burial on the following morning

In loving memory of my devoted wife Gentle Emma Catherine O'Grady, nee Thomas, who passed to her reward on Friday the 27th May 1927, in her fifty second year. Text. The three commemorated above were settlers who took a prominent part in the development of a large aboriginal tract inhabited mainly by Korkus in the Tapti valley. W. A. Thomas was a Municipal Commissioner and Honorary Magistrate of Monghyr where he started life as an indigo planter. He later on became a missionary and worked for some years in the coal fields of Asansol where he built a church at his own expense. At the age of 63 he bought the estate of Kanapur in Nimar district and directed his energies to the improvement of conditions among the aboriginals, teaching them better methods of cultivation and distributing improved seed. He gave medicine and service to all who asked and in time came to settle many of the local disputes, the Korkus prefering his decisions to those of the Civil Courts. The same tradition was carried on by his daughter, Mrs. O'Grady, who was known throughout the Melghat as the " Great Mother ".

			MOHRA
685	15th Oct. 1778.	R. Farquhar ..	A mud chabutra under an old mango tree on the banks of the Kharung river. The chabutra was erected by a Mohamedan malguzar over the remains, of an old grave believed locally to be that of a white man. Village tradition says that long years ago four white men came to Mohra and camped under the tree, and the villagers who had never seen the like of these strangers ran away. The party remained in the village for four days then one of their number died, and after burying him the rest went away. Robert Farquhar, b. 28th February 1755. Son of Robert Farqurhar "Father of the Church", and Katherine his wife, daughter of Walter Turing of Rayne. Brother of Sir Walter Farquhar a famous London physician who attended Pitt in his last illness. Uncle of Robert Townsend Farquhar, Baronet, Private Secretary to Lord Minto, and Director of the H. E. I. C. 1826-28. It is not clear how Farquhar arrived in India or in what capacity he came there. Appointed to sit on Lord Pigott's inquest at Fort St. George, 7th August 1777. Appointed at Elliot's special request to accompany him as Assistant on his Mission to Nagpur, 1778.

			SEMRA
689	12th Sep. 1778.	A. Elliot	In memory of Alr. Elliot, Esq., who having been selected at a very early period of life for the execution of an important commission at the Court of Naugpoor, died of a fever in this place on the 12th of September 1778, aged 23 years. This monument which covers his remains was erected in testimony of his virtues and of the loss which his State has sustained in his death by order of the Governor General of Bengal. Alexander Elliot B. C. S., b. 1755. Third son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, Member for Selkirk. Lord of the Admiralty etc., and of Agnes Dalrymple Murray Kynynmound. Brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot, M.P. who as a prosecutor took part in the impeachment of Warren Hastings, and later on as First Lord Minto became Governor General in 1807. Arrived in India as Writer 1771. Served as Assistant Commissioner to Collector of Rockunpore 1772. Head Assistant to Registrar of the Sudda Diwani Adawlat 1773. Superintendent of the Khalsa Records 1775; and as Interpreter at the trial of Nandkumar in the same year. During a period of furlough to Europe, Elliot represented Hasting's interests in London, and on his return to India in 1777 became his private secretary and a member of his household. When the news of the declaration of war between England and France reached India in 1778, Hastings decided to try and negotiate an alliance with Nagpur and appointed Elliot, then aged 23, on a salary of Rs. 6,000 per mensem as "Minister and Public Agent of this Government to the Court of Mudhoji Bhonsle, Raja of Berar, for the purpose of negotiating an alliance with that chief." He was invested with full powers to treat. Immediately before his departure on this mission he was sent to seize the person of Monsieur Chevalier, the Governor of the French Settlement of Chandernagore; it is said that a chill caught while swimming a river in pursuit of that officer gave him the germs of the disease which subsequently caused his death. He received his credentials on 26th June 1778 and left Calcutta accompanied by Robert Farquhar as Assistant, Capt. William Campbell in command of his escort and Lieut. James Anderson. In spite of the heavy rains and the difficulties of the road the party reached Cuttack, 290 miles, on August 16th and Sonpur 190 miles further on, 12 days later. The whole party was suffering from exposure and fatigue but pushed on to Semra in Sarangarh State. From here Farquhar reported to Warren Hastings that Elliot was suffering from "a severe bilious disorder", and that Campbell was ill with the same complaint. Three days later Elliot died and was buried at Semra, where his tomb is maintained by the Raja. Farquhar died at Mohra, on the 15th October and though Campbell succeeded in reaching the Court of Mudhoji Rao he could not treat and eventually returned to Calcutta. Warren Hastings who was greatly attached to Elliot wrote the following paraphrase of Horace's Ode II-16-ad Grosphum, while on his way home from Bengal in 1785— "An early death was Elliot's doom, I saw his opening virtues bloom And manly sense unfold Too soon to fade. I bade the stone Record his name midst hordes unknown Unknowing what it told." Reference Wills.

690	8th Apr. 1924.	F. F. Paulus ..	Rev. F. Ferdinand Paulus s. j. born in Eyhezee (Belgium) 14th February 1884, died 8th April 1924. First Jesuit to die in Jashpur. The Mission most of whose personal is of Belgian origin, was established in Jashpur and the first converts made in 1905. In the next year whole villages joined the church and the number of converts soon grew to 24,000. In 1917 permission was granted by the Ruling Chief to erect mission stations for the care and instruction of the converts, 300 of whom joined the Labour Corps during the Great War. In 1930 two of these stations were completed and three more almost finished. In each station there is a school for boys and in three one for girls also. A number of village schools throughout the State are also managed by the Mission. The fact that the people of Jashpur are Oraons like their neighbours of Chota Nagpur has probably greatly assisted the Jesuit Fathers in their work. About a third of the population of the State are now Christians.

Siege of Gawilgarh, 12th-15th December 1803

After the battle of Argaum, Wellesley marched to the assault of Gawilgarh.

This fortress crowns a peak of the Satpuras which juts out over the plain of Berar from the Chikalda plateau to which it is connected by a narrow neck. The stronghold consists of a complete inner fort which fronts to the south where the rock is most steep, and an outer fort which covers the inner to the north and northwest. All the walls are strongly built and protected by ramparts and towers. Communications are through three gateways, one to the south leading to the inner fort, one to the northwest, and one to the north which opens towards the Chi[illegible] plateau. This last was the only one where a real attack was possible and even here it presented considerable di[illegible] owing to the precipitous nature of the approaches from the plain.

Heavy ordnance and stores had to be dragged by hand for over 20 miles by roads hastily constructed by th[illegible] themselves; but the guns were in place near Labada village on December 12th and on the 13th opened fire. [illegible] 14th the breaches were pronounced practicable and the assault fixed for the following day. The main [illegible] entrusted to Stephenson's force now deprived by illness of its old Commander. Wellesley's division watched the southern approaches from the plain below. The command of the storming party, 1 flank and 2 battalion companies of the 94th was given to Col. Kenny, while two detachments of Wellesley's division were to co-operate at the same time, one under Col. Wallace by an attack on the south gate, the other under Col. Chalmers, against the northwest. At 10 a.m. the storming party advanced on the walls where a strong defence was expected, but the outer wall was carried without much difficulty and the main body of the troops followed them in.

The troops then occupied the hill within but found themselves separated from the main fort by a deep ravine, down which many of the enemy were flying towards the Wasali gate. As they opened the gate they found Col. Chalmers facing them and were driven back into the ravine with heavy loss.

Meanwhile the storming party had advanced under a protective fire against the wall of the inner fort. This was unbreached, but they succeeded with scaling ladders in obtaining a footing on the wall in spite of a stout defence by Beni Singh and the Killadar, whose bodies were subsequently found under a heap of dead inside the Delhi Gate. Here the Rajput Infantry fought to a finish and the British troops pouring in over the wall annihilated them. With their death the defence and the campaign itself were over and two days later the treaty of Deogaon was signed. The total British casualties were 14 killed and 112 wounded.

Among the killed were :—

Col. Kenny, 11th M. N. I., mortally wounded.
Lieut. G. Young, 7th M. N. I.
5 rank and file, H. M. 94th Regt.

The graves of the men of the 94th cannot be traced. They were probably buried at the spot where the first British batteries were erected and near Lieut. Young's tomb around which the Chikalda Cemetery has since grown up.

The Battle of Argaum, 29th November 1803.

After the battle of Assaye there followed for Wellesley's force a period of marching and countermarching to check the movements of the united Mahratta armies, while Stephenson proceeded to Asirgarh and reduced that fort on 18th October 1803. Stephenson then entered Berar, marching by the foot of the Satpuras to rejoin Wellesley, who was hard on the heels of the enemy. They met on 29th November at Patholdi, from where the Mahratta armies were plainly visible. Wellesley, whose force had already marched 26 miles that day, did not intend to pursue the enemy further, but as they now seemed inclined for action he decided to attack at once, although it was late afternoon. A short advance from Patholdi showed the Mahrattas drawn up to the south of Argaum, and the British force was able to advance towards it, under cover of the crops that stood high over the plain. When the Madras Native regiments that were leading the attack reached the open ground, they came under a heavy fire from the Mahratta guns and although they had successfully withstood a far heavier fire at Assaye, they now broke; but Wellesley himself was on the spot, and by his own efforts rallied them and led them up by another way to the place he had originally intended them to occupy. While he re-formed the right, Stephenson deployed on the left of the village.

The Mahratta line extended for five miles, their rear resting on the village and gardens of Argaum, while on their front the plain was cut up by many nullahs.

Having given orders for the infantry to advance, Wellesley put himself at the head of the cavalry and advanced against the main body of the Mahratta horse stationed on the left of the enemy position. At 600 yards they halted and the galloper guns came into action. The General then rode back, brought up the infantry till it was in line with the cavalry, and then the advance being sounded, the whole line moved forward at a rapid pace. The Arabs of whom there was a body of 2,000, charged out to meet the attack of the 74th and 78th regiments, but were repulsed, leaving 400 dead behind them. Scindia's cavalry charged the 1st Madras Infantry but were driven off, and the entire army fled in disorder, the cavalry pursuing them for miles across the plain by the light of a full moon. The slaughter was very great, only Beni Singh, Commander of the Nagpur Infantry escaped with some of his troops intact, and took refuge in Gawilgarh.

The total British loss was 46 killed and 308 wounded. Of the killed 15 belonged to the European regiments—

4 rank and file, H. M. 74th Regt.

9 rank and file, H. M. 78th Regt.

2 rank and file, H. M. 94th Regt.

The common grave of the men who fell at Argaum stands on a slight rise about 1 mile south of Argaum village. It bears no inscription but consists of a low chabutra enclosed by an iron railing. A visit to Argaum in 1926 showed that, unlike Assaye there were no local traditions of the battle.

The Battle of Assaye, 23rd September 1803.

After the capture of Ahmednagar Wellesley moved northwards. The armies of Scindia and the Bhonsla had ascended the Ajanta Ghat, with a view to carrying the war into the Nizam's territory, but Wellesley, by rapid marches up the Godaveri, headed them back towards Bhokardan. On September 21st he met Stephenson at Badnapur, when it was decided that the two divisions should move forward separately to Bhokardan where the hircarrahs reported that the enemy had halted; and a joint attack was planned for the 24th. Wellesley accordingly moved forward to Naulnai on the 23rd, intending to strike on the following day. His intelligence concerning the enemies' position however, actually referred to the district and not to the town of Bhokardan, and on arriving at a ridge beyond Naulnai the British Commander suddenly found himself in the presence of the hostile armies which were drawn up on a tongue of land enclosed by the Jua and Kailna rivers, their left resting on Assaye village. Thus unexpectedly faced by the huge Mahratta army, Wellesley saw that his only chance of success lay in an immediate attack without waiting for Stephenson's force to arrive.

The enemy, 50,000 strong, were drawn up in several lines behind their guns, and a dense mass of horse were arrayed on their right, stretching away as far as the eye could see towards Bhokardan. Their front was protected by the Kailna which was swollen by recent rain, their rear by the Jua. Wellesley, noticing an unprotected ford on his right front, wheeled and crossed the Kailna before the Mahrattas could interpose. He then formed his force into two lines of infantry, either flank resting on a river with the cavalry in reserve.

The Battle of Assaye, 23rd September 1803—concld.

The Mahrattas, their left turned, changed ground to meet the new line of attack, their left still on Assaye which was held by their French-trained infantry. They had even now the best of the ground, but Wellesley's manœuvre had lost them their greatest advantage, for on this narrow front their weight of numbers could not make itself fully felt.

Wellesley had intended to drive in the enemy's right before attacking the fort and village of Assaye, but Col. Orrocks in command of the advance piquet exceeded his orders and brought his men under a terrific fire from the fort. The 74th, who had followed the picket, were thus brought under the fire of the guns massed round the village and in a few minutes were virtually annihilated. The Mahratta horse charged the survivors, who in their shattered condition broke. Wellesley then threw in his reserve. The charge of the British cavalry swept through the masses of the enemy horse, up to the guns, sabring the gunners in the batteries, while the Mahratta horse fled from the field.

In the meantime the infantry attacked and drove in the enemy's right, when the assault on the village was renewed. Here Scindia's sepoys put up a stubborn defence and there was some delay in bringing up the guns, which at the commencement of the battle had come under a very heavy fire and lost almost all their bullock teams and drivers. They were eventually manhandled into position. It was not till evening when the 78th, led by Wellesley himself, charged down the central street and gained the fort, that the rout was complete; but the cavalry were by then so weakened that they were unable to pursue the enemy far beyond the Jua. The Mahrattas left 1,200 dead and wounded on the field. The British casualties out of a force of about 4,500 men were 2,057, of these 423 were dead.

Among the killed were—

BURIAL GROUND, ASSAYE

The burial ground at Assaye lies at about a quarter of a mile to the west of the village. It is an irregular patch of scrub jungle surrounded by cotton fields. In the centre is a large banyan tree and under it is a grave scrupulously kept. It bears no inscription. The villagers say that it is the grave of Ussell Sahib, who died in the evening of the day of the great fight, heading a cavalry charge across the river. This is clearly the grave of Col. Maxwell of the 19th Dragoons, and local memory is correct in detail.

762	23rd Sep. 1803.	P. Maxwell ..	A stone tomb, uninscribed, surrounded by a mud wall. Lt.-Col. Patrick Maxwell, H. M. 19th Dragoons. Capt. in the 19th Light Dragoons, 1st April 1792. Major 1799. Lt.-Col. 1st January 1800. Services—Expedition against Pondicherry 1793. Mallavelly. Expedition and fall of Seringapatam 4th May 1799. Expedition against Dhoodia Wao, "King of the Two Worlds" 1800-01. Ahmednagar 8th August 1803. Led the charge that broke the Mahratta horse before the fort at Assaye and disabled the enemy guns. Later on he led the charge of the 19th, and the 4th and 7th N. C. against Pohlmann's Brigade after the general rout had begun. The infantry held their fire almost to the moment of contact when they raked the advancing cavalry, and Maxwell fell dead. Mentioned in Wellesley's despatch of 23rd September 1803, and in a General Order by the Governor-General in Council 30th October 1803. His widow Catherine (probably daughter of Dr. Hamilton, Rector of St. Martin's in the Fields), was granted a pension of £300 by the East India Company in recognition of Maxwell's services. This was then the only instance of a pension granted to a King's Officer by the Company. Reference The 19th and their Times and Gentlemans Magazine, 1804.
